Word has been received from the bridge company that has the contract for putting the span across Stout's Creek, that the span had been shipped from St. Louis Monday. It should be in place within a week. The contractors insist that they have been unavoidably delayed in securing the material.

To my young friend, Mr. E. H. Amelung, of Saginaw, Michigan, lately on a visit to the old home in Pilot Knob, I am indebted for a box of fine cigars. I like to smoke a good cigar, and a present of this kind "hits me right where I live," but of infinitely greater pleasure to me is the friendly spirit which impels the gift.

Dick Loyd, who lives about four miles south of Ironton, had the misfortune to have his house and nearly all its contents destroyed by fire Wednesday evening of last week about four o'clock. The fire originated from a defective flue. Mr. Loyd is a good citizen and he has the sympathy of all his neighbors in his misfortune.

Love Hardy is quoted as saying that he had to join the Republicans to break up the corrupt ring in the courthouse. Does any one think, for a moment, that Mr. Hardy would have joined the Republicans, "to break up the ring" if he had secured the nomination for county clerk in the Democratic primary election two years ago? Not on your life.

A law suit from Annapolis was tried in Squire Fairchild's court Monday. Mrs. Slusher sued a man by the name of Brown for the possession of her property and for $12. Brown had in a counter claim for $12.38. The court gave judgment for Brown for eighty-eight cents, gave Mrs. Slusher her property and decided that she should pay all the costs of the case.

James Thomas of Graniteville, who has held the position of quarry boss for the Syenite Granite Company for some time past, died in Mullaphy hospital in St. Louis Sunday where he was taken a couple of weeks ago suffering from typhoid fever. The deceased was a good man his demise is generally deplored. The remains were interred at Middlebrook Tuesday morning.

The ice man's soul is filled with gloom, the coal man's business takes a boom; in summer's heat or winter's chill the sons of men must pay their bill, because they think they can't endure the then existing temperature, for when the weather's hot, it's queer, we want to cool the atmosphere. Still discontented with our lot, when it gets cold we want it hot. How they afflict and vex the soul, these bills we pay for ice and coal.—Montgomery, Ill., News.

Says the Bismarck correspondent of the Farmington Times: "We hear considerable in Bismarck about the Revolt ticket in Iron county. It looks at this distance that it is simply a cunning scheme of the same old hopeless minority party to get to the ple counter by enlisting and using a few of the majority temporarily affected with mental strabismus. The self-styled Revolt ticket is very, very much like the proverbial mule, heaving neither pride of ancestry nor hope of posterity."

Word was received here the evening of Saturday, October 16th, of the death that afternoon of William Farmer, Reynolds county, of William Farmer. Mr. Farmer's illness was of short duration, as he had been in Ironton a couple of days previous on a visit to his mother and seemed to be in his usual good health. The deceased was about thirty years of age and leaves a wife and one child to mourn him. He was born and reared in Ironton and has many friends here who sympathize with the family in their sorrow. The funeral occurred at Lesterville the following Sunday and was attended by Mrs. Phoebe Farmer, Newman Farmer and Mr. and Mrs. Tual of Arcadia.

Fred Muller, one of the accessories to the shooting of Jake Wollem near Desloge on Labor Day, is now lodged in the Farmington jail. The night following the shooting Muller went to Middlebrook, whither he was traced by Sheriff Murphy the next day. Muller immediately left for Reynolds county. Murphy traced him into the Black River hills. He placed a man named Parker upon Muller's trail and the latter pressed Muller so closely that in order to escape being captured Muller returned to Cantwell, Mo., the home of his father. Muller's father took him to Farmington and turned him over to the officers of the law. With the exception of Joe and Leslie Dooley the last of the many fugitives from justice in St. Francois county have been rounded up.—Lead Belt News.

The Frisco Ore Mining Company is preparing to make extensive improvements at the Carson mine, which is owned and operated by the company. When these improvements are made the Carson mine will be among the largest producers of iron ore in Missouri and the force of miners to be employed will be largely increased. There is now being erected a large washer to be used in cleaning the ore in order that it can be shipped to the smelter free from clay and dirt. This washer was designed by W. F. McClurg, manager of the company, and there is not another one anywhere in the country. Last month Mr. McClurg made a tour of inspection to the great iron mining district around Birmingham, Ala. He made the trip in order to investigate the latest improved methods for handling iron ore.—Howell County Gazette.

The case of State vs. George Jones was tried Wednesday of last week and the jury assessed a fine of one hundred dollars and costs. The case was going to be appealed, but by agreement of the attorneys the defendants agreed to pay the fine and costs on condition that the case of Ed. Jones be dismissed at cost of defendant, which was done. The charge against the Jones boys was carnally knowing one Neoma Kemper, a girl fourteen years of age. The whole affair is to be regretted very much. From the testimony it seems that the Kemper girl and the Jones boys were attending a graded school in Brunot last February. The girl was rather "fast" for her years and permitted the boys to seduce her. Both families connected with the matter have heretofore borne the best of reputations, and the matter on both sides is very deplorable. This is a lesson to parents to more carefully train up and guard their young girls, and to young men and boys to keep in the way of virtue and morality. The costs in the case aggregate about $500.00.—Greenville Sun.

Four or five weeks ago a couple of traveling men went from this city to Newport on Iron Mountain passenger train No. 1, which leaves this city at 8.13 at night. The train was badly crowded and among the passengers were two negro men from St. Louis. They occupied separate seats in the car known as the "ladies car." They were told to go forward to the negro apartments and complied, but found that car badly crowded and no seats available. They then returned to the car they had just left and each sat down beside the two above mentioned drummers. The drummers protested to the conductor, who was unable to remedy the matter. The two drummers got off the train at Newport, both very angry. The next morning they learned that the Newport grand jury was in session and both went before that body with the result that two true bills were returned against the Iron Mountain railroad company for a violation of the Arkansas State laws of allowing negroes to occupy the same passenger coach with white people.—Poplar Bluff Citizen.

Last Thursday afternoon occurred one of those deplorable accidents which, it seems, come to teach us that there is a fate which neither desire nor painstaking can affect in its working out the destinies of men. There is no more careful man in my acquaintance, nor one more scrupulously attentive to his work, than Dr. A. S. Prince, dentist, of this town. His life since attaining manhood has been spent in this community, and I know of no one standing higher in his profession as well as in his person. On the day named while treating a patient, Mrs. Dubacher, from Graniteville, at her request for a little brandy, he reached up to a shelf behind him where were ranged a number of phials, and he took up the wrong phial—that is all! You or I might have made a like mistake, how easily! The lady lived less than an hour, and darkness fell upon the home which knew her as wife and mother. My heart goes out to all, but more especially to him who, however innocent, is still self-accuser. Yet it must give him some comfort in his great trouble to know that we who know him and respect him have no other thought for him than the sincerest sympathy.

The following from the pen of Rose H. Leach, in reference to the Eskimo people is reproduced from a late issue of the Chicago Inter Ocean: "These people have, of course, no written language, and their speech is conglomerate mixture of ks and guttural grunts. It is exceedingly difficult to learn for many reasons; for instance, in counting, after they count to twenty-nine, they form thirty by saying, 'Inyenuk kolinyack' (twenty and ten), etc., so that by the time they arrive at seventy they say, 'pinyetsuke epuk kolinyack' (three times twenty and ten). When they add a pronoun to a noun they generally change the ending of the noun; it will be readily seen how confusing this may be. In the Eskimo language water is 'imhook,' and milk is also 'imhook.' To the Chicago man this might not seem strange, but it is impossible to conceive the native of that far north-land can know of the steps of the dairyman at the hydrants on his route. No Eskimo child can be born in the house, nor can a passing snow take flight therefrom. When a birth is imminent the prospective mother is removed from the house until the child is born—even though the temperature be fifty below—when she is quickly taken in. When an Eskimo approaches death—and the 'shaman' (doctor) has exhausted his skill in vain—his people put him in a tent, which they fasten closely and leave him until the breath has left his body. They do not bury their dead in the ground, but place the body, wrapped tightly in many folds of canvas, upon an elevated platform, under which they hang or pile all the garments, guns, hyaks, or other belongings of the departed native. My Eskimo teacher, Akayak, told me that this was done more in the spirit of a tribute to the dead than of indicating the belief that the soul of the Eskimo would return to claim them. When an Eskimo decides it is no longer good for him to live alone, he sets about his courting by proffering to the maiden of his choice some article of wearing apparel, generally a fur parka (coat) or pair of fur trousers. This latter gift might seem to the white man as establishing a dangerous precedent. If she accepts the gift the matter is settled and she thereupon takes up her abode in his igloo. Some of the young squaws are prepossessing, but they age rapidly, and the old women are repulsive in appearance. The Eskimos are not cleanly persons, and their presence is rendered objectionable by the strong odor of seal oil, which they use freely both internally and externally, or, as one white man said "infernally." When an Eskimo family sits down it is on the floor of the igloo in a circle; the center is a large wooden bowl filled with seal oil, into which each man dips his allowance of fish, seal, or whale meat at each bite. They are favorably disposed toward the white man's food, especially loaf sugar, which they deem the greatest delicacy. They have also a strong penchant for chewing gum, and about the towns are rarely seen without an immense wad of "koo-chuk," which they chew audibly. They are exceedingly superstitious. On March 28 of last year the natives at Cape Prince of Wales were thrown into a panic by the eclipse of the sun which occurred on that date. All the women and children ran up and down the streets of the village crying that the sun was "iseerok" (bad), and begging the missionary to appeal to heaven for assistance. Since the Nome rush they have developed a new superstition. In the year 1900 about 50 per cent of their people died during an epidemic of measles brought from Siberia by natives. The old Eskimos insist that the deaths were caused by the white men digging up so much of the ground in their mining operations. They assert that it is perfectly proper to dig for the foundation of a house or for a cache, but that the earth should be disturbed for no other purpose. They are now complaining bitterly at Cape Prince of Wales because white men are mining for tin near there and they say that many of their people will die as they did in 1900. They fear to climb to the tops of mountains, believing that the devils dwell there, who can influence or injure them. They believe in metempsychosis, and when the arctic wind whistles mournfully they whisper that it is a soul seeking a habitation."

LOUIS MILLER,
ARCADIA, MO.

A Statement from H. B. Counts.

Friend Editor—I see G. W. Scoggin has put on his gaitle and is making war against the county court, and claiming that the court was holding up the county road matter here as an electioneering scheme. In justice to the court, I shall say the court have done all they promised so far; for now, in the first place, I told the court in case they changed the road as my petition called for, then at my own expense, I would open a road by putting my fence back on the east side of my farm, and make a country road, so those living above on the creek could go to mill without crossing the creek at Sabula, as the road now runs. As some hard feelings seem to raise, as generally do in such cases, the court thought best to wait and see. It might suit better to make the county road there than through town, in case they could do so by the law, as they wish to do right in the matter.

Now, I like to see a man go to war in war time; but, Mr. Editor, we realize the fact now is the time of peace, except with some few who seem sore and want an excuse to kick some one.

As for the county court, I have found them white, and expect to treat them so.

Well, everything is quiet and will remain the same until November 8.

Respy,
H. B. COUNTS.
